

From Center for Constitutional Rights

A federal judge has rejected the late Center for Constitutional Rights' attempt to file a motion to dismiss the case against the U.S. military on behalf of Susan Abu Ghraib.

"I am so happy to receive the news that our case can proceed toward trial. I have stayed patient and hopeful," said Sam Al-Jarrah.

Nearly 20 years after the 9/11 attacks, the case against the U.S. military for the torture of detainees at Abu Ghraib prison in Iraq is finally moving forward. The 15-year quest for justice for the victims of the Abu Ghraib torture case is finally moving forward.
